

Abstract

The present invention relates to automated methods for staining biological materials on a slide comprising the use of component histochemical solutions mixed directly on a biological sample of interest by the steps of providing at least two stable solutions that together form an unstable staining solution, sequentially delivering the stable solutions to a biological sample of interest on a surface, and mixing the stable solutions directly on the biological material of interest to effectuate staining of the materials.